The hard work continues

Dear Hector,

Even in an often divided Washington, I've found ways to continue delivering the real results that the people of California deserve.

From working on tax cuts for families and cutting red tape, to getting our economy back on track and restoring American leadership abroad, I wanted to share a few updates from the last couple of weeks on how I've been hard at work for you.

Reducing Taxes For Families

The president unveiled a blueprint for tax reform that could mean big tax savings for you and your family. What do you think should be included in the bill? I'd love your feedback and ideas.

Keeping Children Safe Online

Last week, I had the chance to partner with Google to present the Online Safety Roadshow at Chavez Middle School to help teach students how to stay safe online.

Cleaning Up California

I travelled down to the border with neighboring Congressman Juan Vargas (D-CA) to take a look at the sewage spilling across the Tijuana River and meet with federal officials and work towards a solution.

Securing Our Borders

Over the last district work period, I spent time at our southern border being updated and briefed by local border patrol on their needs and operations to help keep us all safe and enforce our laws.

Ensuring Constituents Are Heard

Even when we disagree, its important that people feel heard. Last week, when protestors showed up outside my office, I came down and spent a few minutes answering their questions and hearing their concerns.

Fighting Homelessness in San Diego

I've received countless hand-written letters and stories from constituents concerned about how a change to federal housing regulations will harm area homeless shelters. This week, I took their concerns directly to HUD asking them to change this unfair ruling.

Restoring Stability to the Middle East

After returning from our delegation to Lebanon, Jordan and Egypt, I wrote an article that appeared in the Huffington Post laying out the need for American leadership abroad.

Cutting Red Tape

A new study says that since inauguration, Congress and the executive branch have now reduced more than $86 billion worth of regulations. It's a good start and a necessary step getting our economy back on track.

It's always important to hear feedback and ideas from constituents like you! Should you ever need help with a federal agency or want to share your ideas, feel free to contact one of my offices or send me an email directly.

I'll be sure to get back to you as soon as I can!

Sincerely,

Congressman Darrell Issa
